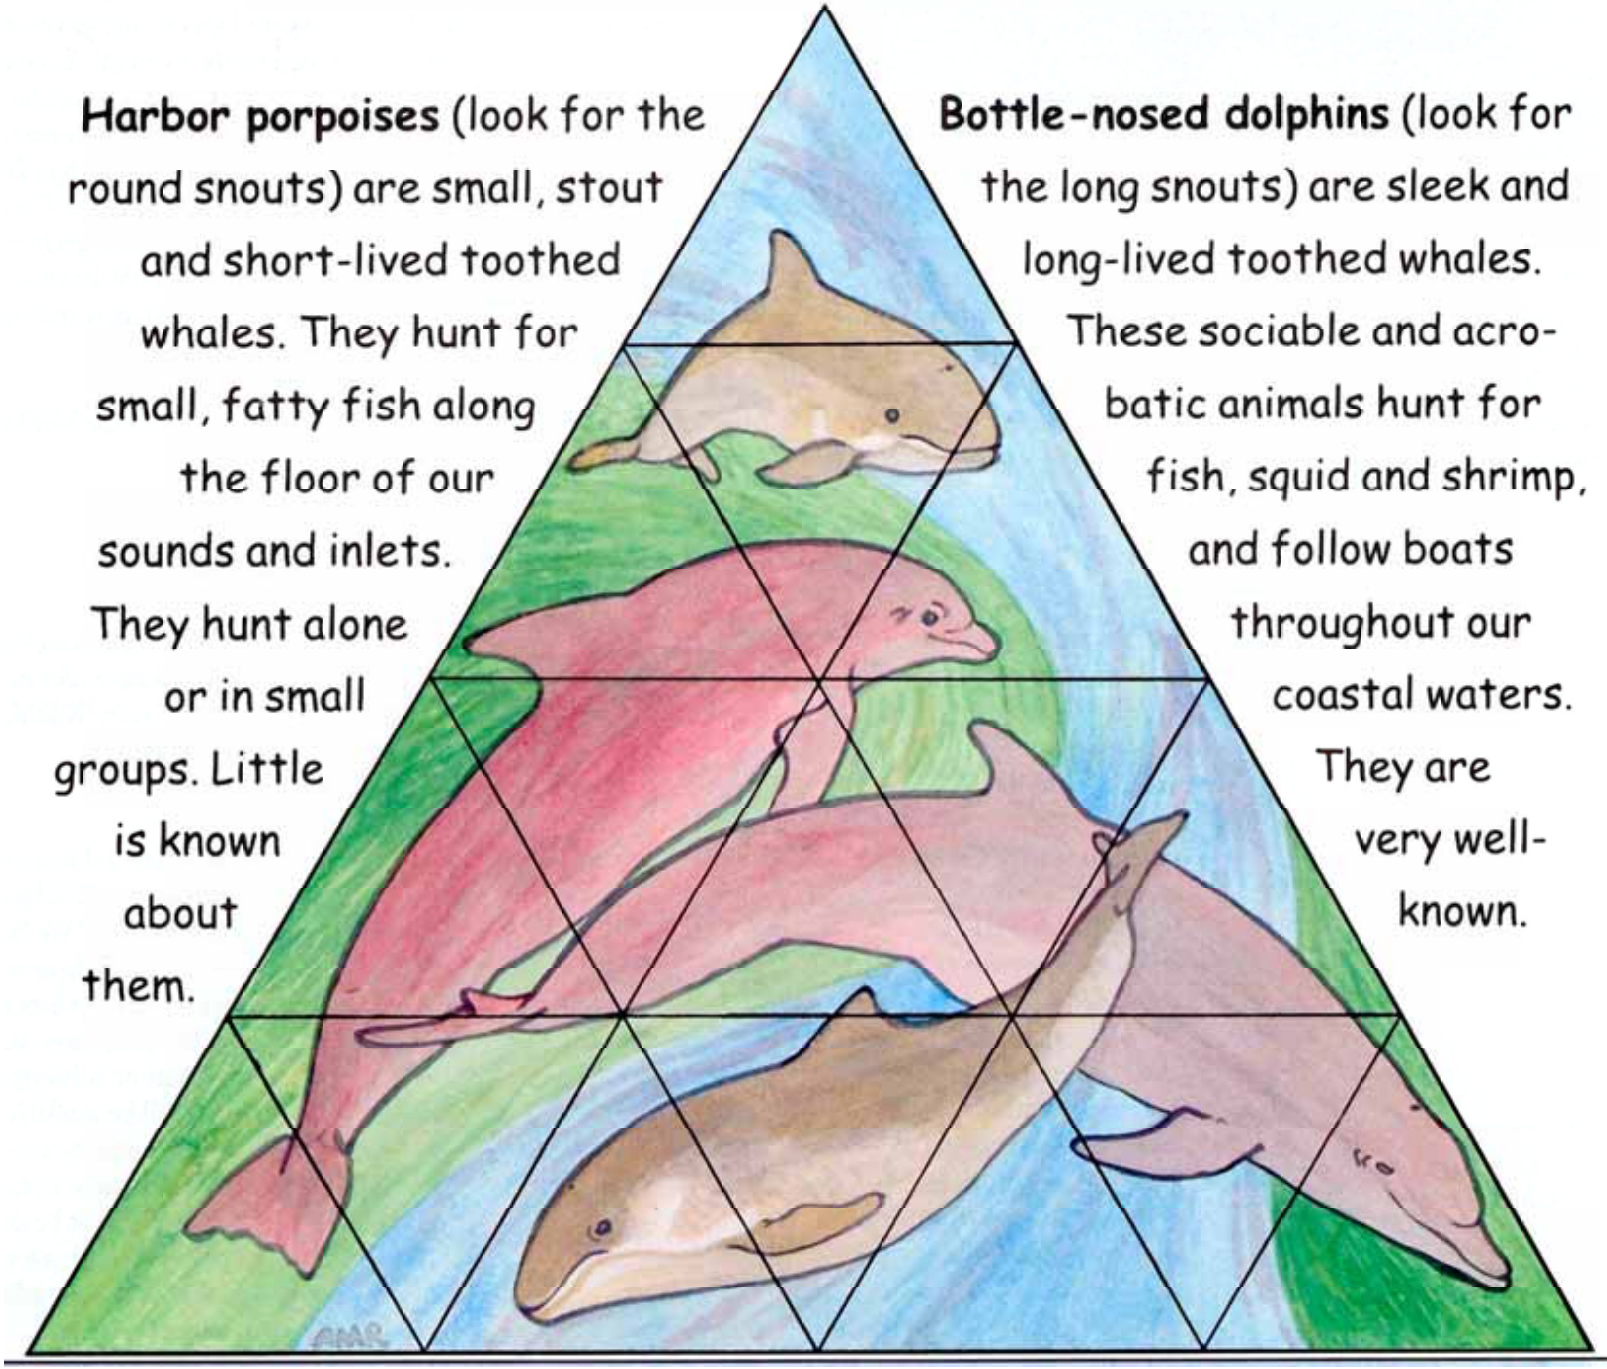
A Pair of Toothed Whales in Our Sounds

(Cut out the puzzle pieces along the black lines, and reassemble it.)

Harbor porpoises (look for the round snouts) are small, stout and short-lived toothed whales. They hunt for small, fatty fish along the floor of our sounds and inlets. They hunt alone or in small groups. Little is known about them.


Bottle-nosed dolphins (look for the long snouts) are sleek and long-lived toothed whales. These sociable and acrobatic animals hunt for fish, squid and shrimp, and follow boats throughout our coastal waters. They are very well-known.
